Talking with Billy Joel about his Motorcycle Exhibit in Sag, June 6

By Dan Rattiner

Billy Joel is back in town after a month out touring America with Elton John. He said he was glad to be home in Sag Harbor. "My favorite town," he called it. The duo had been playing to adoring crowds in stadiums and coliseums in such places as Fargo, St. Louis, Omaha and Indianapolis.

Billy Joel also has a limp.

"How did that happen?" I asked.

"Jumped off a piano," he said.

"You know I'm not 19 anymore. But sometimes on stage, I think I'm 19." Made perfect sense.

Billy was walking me around through his motorcycle collection, which is located on the ground floor of his Sag Harbor home in what used to be a three-car garage. Beginning on June 6, his collection of cycles, about 15 from this house and another 15 from elsewhere, is going to be on display at Christy's Building Art Centre on Main Street, Sag Harbor. The display is to be called "The Motorcycle as Art and Icon." The showing will continue through June 20.

These are not ordinary motorcycles. They are sensational in appearance, but they are not antique motorcycles either. By way of explanation, Billy gave me the story of a magnificent chrome and steel affair called a Harley Davidson Soft Tail. It looked like a 50 year old Harley in perfect condition all shined up.

"This Harley was built just one year ago," he said. "It was not built specially for me. It is a stock bike you can buy in any cycle shop. But I had it taken over to a bike shop I work with in Smithtown called Lighthouse Harley Davidson and they modified it to look like a 50-year-old Harley."

He told me the little tricks that they had done to it to make it look like that earlier model. They replaced the dashboard with gauges from 50 years ago. They added exhaust tubes. They covered the shock absorbers with a chrome casing and they installed a replica of "The original Harley had no shock absorbers. The new ones do. We just covered them over with this chrome housing."

I didn't need for him to tell me why they called one soft and the other hard.

Billy has three brand new Royal Enfield messenger bikes. They still make them, almost exactly as they made them during the Second World War. All he had to do with them was put in the old fashioned passenger seat from a half century ago, which is much less comfortable than the ones now. He also had a General Montgomery beret with the military pins on it on one of them and also a World War II Spitfire fighter plane insignia on the side. The other two he left just as they were.

He's got a new Triumph Thruxton from England, and an '07 Harley Road King all decked out with leather and fringes to look like an Elvis bike.

"This is one of my favorites," he told me as he steered me over to a BMW he had tricked out to look like a Nazi Germany Wehrmacht Gespan — an officer's military motorcycle. It came complete with a German soldier helmet from that war and a sidecar, which he said, had been made in the Soviet Union.

"The Russians copied the Germans. People look at me funny driving up US1a in Florida in this thing and I shout at them, 'It's okay, I'm Jewish.'"

He does have really old bikes. He has got the stick shift used in models 50 years earlier. That's how you would shift.

"Today's bikes have the shift in the hand grip," he told me. "We geared this bike up to shift from the floor. My goal is to take this to a bike show and have some old timer come over and say wow, there's an old hard tail! How did you come by that? And I tell them look again. It looks old, but it has all the new engineering."

Billy had to explain to me the difference between a soft tail and a hard tail. I thought he'd had a slip of the tongue when he gave it the name one way and then the other.

Southampton House with Tales to Tell is Teardown for Calvin Klein

By Dan Rattiner

For the last six months, I have been corresponding with an American woman named Renee d'Aunay, who lives in the south of France. She is the beautiful daughter of an American military officer who, in another life and another name, was someone I knew 30 years ago here in Southampton.

And I think she started this correspondence with me, and also, she let me know, with Stephen Gaines, who wrote Philistines at the Hedgerow, because she wanted to tell the story of a truly traumatic few years she went through all those years ago when she was married to a secretive multi-millionaire named Barry Trupin.

She wrote at length about that time, and I would not tell you much about what she wrote because it was, in many ways, a private correspondence. However, I will tell you that her telling of this story, I think, acted as a kind of catharsis for her, and as I was fond of her when I knew her all those years ago, I was happy to hear her tale. There were certain things she wanted said that would set the record straight. And she said them.

I wouldn't be writing at all about her at this time, except to say that the extraordinary house that Renee and Barry lived in right on the ocean on Meadow Lane is, during this week and next, in the process of being torn down by its present owner, Calvin Klein.

Three months ago, when Klein applied for a demolition permit for the house so he could build another smaller and more manageable — it is easily the largest house in Southampton — I wrote her about it and her immediate instinct was to say she would fly home to watch it go. But then she wrote again and said she had thought better of it. Perhaps it was better to remember it the way it was.

Now I have to write her again. The Old English Pub, bought in Devon in its entirety in 1982 and shipped here and re-assembled as a bar and pub in that mansion, is currently being chewed to pieces by a bulldozer. Another bulldozer is attacking the indoor glass enclosed shark lagoon that Barry built. You could scuba among the sharks and other fishes if you liked. Still another is about to tear into the living room — about the size of a high school gymnasium — that is right off the grand front entryway. The turrets on the roof, or what remains of them, are falling.

I don't know. Life moves on. This house has had an extraordinary history. And now it is over.

The house was originally built as a classic and very boring three-story Georgian home with 62

IT'S OKAY TO COME OUT. SWAN IS NOT MAD.

By Dan Rattiner

One of the things I do when I go to work every day from East Hampton to Bridgehampton is monitor the goings on of the white swans in East Hampton's quarter mile long Town Pond. The Montauk Highway goes along the northern shore of the pond. James Lane, much less traveled, goes along the south shore. In the pond, there is a male and female, a handsome couple, who have staked a claim there. It's their pond, year-round.

They built a mud and twig nest two years ago along the western shore of the pond just a few feet in from where James Lane goes by. It's about nine feet around and three feet above the water.

In April of 2008, the female laid eggs in the pond and upon it sat and sat and sat for the appropriate six weeks, as the male fended off rubber-necking drivers and passengers by flapping his wings, running up to the cars and pecking at them.

Then the eggs hatched, there were babies, and it was a whole different matter.

I wasn't quite as aware of the goings on with these two last spring, but because the nest remained, just sitting there unused all winter, I began to pay much closer attention to everything this spring.

When the two swans once again got interested in the nest in March, patching it up here and there with various bits of mud and sticks, it became apparent to me they were getting ready for another big day when mama would again climb aboard.

The pond is populated by various other creatures, of course, turtles, mallard ducks, egrets and other assorted wildlife that come and go. All of them, I might add, gave the nest a wide berth once the female was up there in deference to the potential wrath of the father. Humans, on the other hand, did not.

Two signs went up along the James Lane side

Hondas, an old Italian Moto Guzzi from 1976, a DuCotta 750 Sport from 1975 and a 1939 EL Knucklehead Deluxe OHV. As for the new bikes made to look old, he seems just about ready to take orders to build these custom bikes of his own design for others. He's incorporated a company, 20th Century Cycles. He's thinking that if you want one of these Billy Joel originals, you might call Lighthouse Harley Davidson of Smithtown and place an order.

"I think we ought to do this," he said. "But maybe just a few."

"Do you have a favorite motorcycle?" I asked.

He thought about it for a long time, looking them all over. "No," he finally said. "I love all of them."

I pointed out that Billy is doing the exact same thing he did 15 years ago when he went into the boat building business on Shelter Island. At that time, he decided he'd like to build picnic boats of his own design. He drew a design for what one might look like on a napkin at the Candy Kitchen for me back then.

Picnic boats were popular in the 1930s and '40s and were identifiable as slow, gentle creatures about 38 feet long with wooden hulls, small inboard motors, large spacious open cabins and a sleeping cabin below. They were in vogue back then, as crafts to be used to go on picnics. Pack up your family in one of these, take them across a bay to a deserted beach and drop anchor. They'd go 12 knots. There's one company that currently makes replicas of picnic boats. Billy wanted to make them of his own design, and then pack them with twin 300 horsepower engines to take you where you wanted to go at 50 knots. Hang onto your hats.

"Sort of like 'The Little Old Lady from Pasadena,'" I said. Hi there — screech, roar.

He made an arrangement with an old ship building company on Shelter Island called Coecles Harbor Boat Works back then and the plan was that over the next 10 years they might sell five of them. They run about half a million dollars apiece.

"We have sold 52 of them," he said.

Billy and I walked over to the American Hotel for lunch. He's got other things in the fire besides boats and motorcycles and singing. He's writing a book about his life.

"It's sort of a bio-autobiography."

"A memoir?"

"No. I can write about most of my life. But there's certain stuff that I don't really want to write about myself — too personal really — but the publisher thinks that stuff ought to be in the book and I guess I agree with him. So there is to be a second voice in the book. There will be my voice and then this other voice. Sort of a Greek Chorus. It will go back and forth."

"I hope you have final say on everything," I said.

"I do," he said.

And there is a movie about him underway. Some filmmakers have gotten the footage of his famous series of last Shea Stadium concerts, at one of which, you will recall, Paul McCartney showed up for a surprise visit. "They started doing it up as a documentary,"

Billy said. "But it became a movie."

"It's been an amazing life," I said.

"I want to get it all down while I remember all of it," he said.

Walking out of the American Hotel, a couple sitting at a table in the lobby called over to us. The man looked at Billy and said he knew he was Billy Joel and he wanted him to know how much his work had meant to him. "I listen to your songs and they are just so calming and serene. All my cares fall away." He pointed to his wife. "And she's a big fan too." He held out his hand and Billy shook it. "I didn't mean to interrupt," he said. Billy thanked him for saying these nice things.

Walking down Main Street, he limping and me not limping, because I had not jumped off a piano, he said "Calming? Serene? That's an interesting thing to say. I'd have thought maybe just wanting to get up to dance or something."

"At least get a little foot tapping," I chimed in.

Billy Joel and his wife, Katie, will surely be at the opening of the cycle exhibit at Christie's Gallery. After that, I hope he will come to the Have a Heart Ball at Hayground on June 20, where there will be a preview of Dennis Lynch's documentary King of the Hamptons because he is in it (as am I). I invited him anyway. After that, he is back out on the road with Elton for July — Chatanooga, Boise, Cheyenne, Podunk, Duluth, Kalamazoo, Timbuktu — places like that.

Well, maybe not Timbuktu.

Best Way to Fix Malfunctioning TV or Car in the Good Old Days

By Dan Rattiner

Some things change; some things stay the same.

My wife was on her cell phone.

"Yes, we expect to be over there sometime this afternoon. We'll — hello? Hello?"

Another dropped call.

But consider this — a black and white movie from the 1930s. Bette Davis is on the phone.

"Yes, we expect to be over there sometime this afternoon. We'll — hello? Hello?"

Of course, back then, it took an operator, summoned by pressing repeatedly on the receiver cradle, to fix the problem.

"Operator? We were cut off. Operator? Yes.

Could you reconnect me to Alice, please?"

Did you know that in the old days, in the early days of television in the 1950s and 1960s, you fixed a TV with your fist?

If the picture started wobbling or rolling, you just got out of your chair and gave it a good clonk on the side. All fixed.

Today, fixing a television involves calling the service department of your cable company. TVs are fine. They do not break. But the service can get interrupted. You get the announcement giving the options, and when you press one, often as not you get a message saying that the conversation could be recorded for training purposes and then you get told that all representatives are busy servicing other callers and that your call will be answered in the order that it was received. Finally, there is somebody in the Philippines who walks you through how to fix your TV. No fists.

It was so satisfying hitting a TV with your fist. When I was a little boy, I watched my dad do it. After success, he would pump his fist in the air and give a cheer of victory.

He also would try whacking something under the hood of the car when that thing didn't work right. It would be a distributor. Or a starter motor. Or a water pump. With the car, the success rate doing this was about 20%. With the TV,

LAND: WE BOUGHT IT. NOW WE'RE RETHINKING IT.

By Dan Rattiner

With real estate sales down, the money accumulated from the real estate tax that towns and villages collect on every transaction is down. In 2007, throughout the Hamptons, in the various towns and villages, a total of $90 million was brought in by the 2% tax, all of it to be used to purchase open land and historic sites to save them forever. In 2008, the total was half that. And in 2009, it's going to be down further, it would appear.

Because the towns and villages make these large real estate transactions in the same way we regular folks do, by mortgaging to pay them off with future income (the municipalities do this by bonding), the fall in Community Preservation Fund (CPF) income has created severe problems. Numerous properties in mid-purchase are being reevaluated. What can go through? What will have to be jettisoned?

As you will see, both the state and the county are coming to the rescue in some of these transactions. It is to their credit they are doing this. They have financial problems themselves. But they do have deeper pockets.

In Southampton Town, a treasured farm stand and farm in Sagaponack known as Pike's Farm is being rescued in a complicated transaction that will include funding from not only the State and County, but also from the Peconic Land Trust. This is a transaction involving 7.6 acres of farmland and about $4.5 million. In the end, the Peconic Land Trust will assume the title to the property.

In a transaction in Greenport where the village has purchased a 6.2 acre sandy beach on Long Island Sound for $1.7 million to make it a village beach for local residents, the County has stepped in to save the property after Greenport, deep in debt, announced it would sell the property to developers. The County will pay the Town $1.7 million to save this public beach, and presumably will make it a County beach with special privileges for Greenport residents.

In East Hampton, a major purchase made last year by the Town of the former Boy's Harbor Camp, located on the waters of Three Mile

Who's Here

By Debbie Tuma

As the daughter of long-time Daily News drama critic Douglas Watt and Broadway actress/producer Ethel Watt, Patty Watt's fate was surely to become a producer herself.

Douglas Watt started his career as a copy boy at the Daily News before advancing to drama critic, and later the music critic for The New Yorker. He later wrote a column for that magazine called "Tables For Two," as well as profiles of luminaries in the music business.

Ethel Watt, a singer and actress in more than a dozen Broadway shows, including those by Cole Porter, decided to retire from the stage to raise a family.

"My mother, now 85, and father, now 95, met during the musical Kiss Me Kate," said Patty Watt, sitting in an office inside Guild Hall, where she has produced shows. "My Mom had a beautiful voice, and they met through their shared love of the theater and the arts."

The couple lived in Southampton, where Watt started spending summers from the age of five. When she was 10, her mother began producing Broadway shows again, including Crimes of the Heart, as well as jazz concerts.

During Watt's childhood, her parents took her and her sister to places like the Apollo Theater, the Persian Room at the Plaza, Basin Street East jazz club, the Village Vanguard and the Blue Angel nightclub, where Barbra Streisand began her career. They were friends with Duke Ellington, Irving Berlin, Kurt Weill, Sy Coleman, and Frank Lesser of "Guys and Dolls."

"I recently found old letters that famous people — Jimmy Durante, Lena Horn, Bobby Short, and Duke Ellington — had written to my Dad," said Watt, who lives in Southampton and New York City. "I'm thinking of doing a play based on these letters."

Watt attended public school on the Upper West Side, and said she was "pretty shy in high school." She graduated at age 16, and went to NYU and Hunter College for awhile, but left to try other things.

As a teenager, she modeled for Wilhelmina and Ford agencies, and got acting jobs, but soon decided she was happier behind the scenes.

"Back then, I wanted to stay away from the family business, and do something else on my own," she recalled. "So when I was 17, my boyfriend and I opened a women's clothing store called, 'Animal Crackers,' in Southampton. In 1972, Watt opened 'Havana 1919' in Amagansett, a store offering clothing, leather goods and jewelry. She recalled "many exciting moments in this store, such as when Mick Jagger, John Lennon and Yoko

Patty Watt, Producer

She's producing the Astaire Awards, where the "Douglas Watt Lifetime Achievement" prize, named for her father, is presented.

Ono came in to buy clothes back in the '70s.

"I even sold Duke Ellington's baby blue Cadillac," laughed Watt, who ran the store through her late 30s, helping to raise money for her mother's productions. She then took an interest in producing, joining her mother in various ventures. With Mia Farrow's sister, Prudence, who worked on the film Widow's Peak. In 2001, Watt saw the play Love, Janis, about the life of Janis Joplin, at Bay Street Theatre in Sag Harbor, and she got the financing to bring it to the off-Broadway stage in New York. In 2002, with Mercedes Ruehl, she produced the show Manhattan Cassanova at Guild Hall. Watt produced a reading series for new plays with playwright Joe Pintauro of Sag Harbor, and she still does readings at the Neighborhood Playhouse in NYC.

Last year, Watt produced the film Vote and Die by Mark Mitchell, that went to international film festivals and won an award in Paris. The film stars Eli Wallach, his wife, Anne Jackson, Marissa Berenson, and Julie Wilson.

"Every summer, I also do a series at Guild Hall called, 'American Musical Theater Series Salutes,' with a tribute to different composers," said Watt. "It's based on Broadway and cabaret stars — from Cole Porter, to George Gershwin, to Sy Coleman, and Rogers & Hammerstein."

Watt has also produced many shows at the Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center, and has been asked to do programming at the Huntington Hartford Museum at Columbus Circle in Manhattan.

Between productions, Watt works as a chocolatier, selling healthy "Xocai Chocolate" to her friends and family. "Performers are interested in the latest health crazes and this is loaded with anti-oxidants," she said. "I'm thinking of calling it 'chocolate theater.'"

Now, Watt and Ron Glucksman are immersed in producing the upcoming Astaire Awards, the only dance awards for Broadway and film, that will be held at the Fashion Institute of Technology on June 1. "These awards were created by the Anglo American Society, in honor of Fred Astaire, and my Dad was asked to be the President of the nominating Committee," said Watt. "He also helped start the Drama Desk Awards, and he was the founder of the Drama Critics Circle. He chaired the nominating committee of the Astaire Awards for about 30 years."

Now, The New York Times and New York Post drama critic Clive Barnes decided to establish an award in Watt's father's name, called the "Douglas Watt Lifetime Achievement Award." Last year, Brooke Shields presented the award to Tommy Tune. This year, Liza Minelli will present the Award to director and choreographer Stanley Donen, who made many films with Fred Astaire, and directed and choreographed Singing in the Rain and Funny Face.

This event will be hosted by Alan Cumming, and other presenters include actors Geoffrey Rush and Marissa Berenson. K.T. Sullivan will sing, and dancers from Broadway will do production numbers from shows and films, including Slumdog Millionaire. This event will benefit the Auditory Oral School in New York, which helps deaf children under the age of five to speak without sign language, using cochlear implants. ## Smack (continued from page 17) success was about 90%. It was REALLY satisfying when smacking the car got it to start back up again.

This reminiscence came to mind the other day when we visited a surfer dude named Hal, now about 60, who lives in a shack out in some woods at the back of a remote beach called Barcelona Point in the Northwest section of East Hampton. He lives there with his wife, Linda, and dog, Max, and a no-name 20-year-old pickup truck and that's about it. He listens to the goings on in the outside world over an old transistor radio from the '50s. He has seen people with cell phones. He isn't interested in owning one. He travels to Sag Harbor for canned goods and batteries.

Hal certainly had never seen anything like my iPhone. I handed it to him.

"It's not just a cell phone," I told him. I showed him how you turned it on, how you got the news, stock quotes, your e-mail, your address book and so forth and so on. I showed him the GPS system and the road maps and how with a certain click you could even hold it up to the speaker of a radio and on the screen would appear the name of the song you were listening to and who was singing it.

He took all this in.

"What do you do when it breaks?" he asked.

I thought about it. "You whack it," I said.

Harbor, is being saved by Suffolk County. The camp is 27.8 acres and was purchased for $7.34 million by the Town, which intended to make it a limited access wild nature area. It remains to be seen what the County might decide to do with it.

Also in East Hampton, while everything was coming under review, it was found that two properties that were bought with CPF funds two years ago never had the necessary historic designations to be eligible for the use of CPF money. As this seems to have been just more bungling by the current administration, which has so disappointed the townspeople that not one of the current elected officials has been selected for reelection by either of the two political parties in the upcoming elections, a big fuss is being made over this additional lapse.

The two properties are the Duck Creek Farm on Three Mile Harbor Road, a beautiful wetlands property of 2.3 acres abutting the harbor that was not officially designated a historic landmark at the time of the sale, even though a decrepit farmhouse and barn on the property were restored with CPF money. The other is the Selah Lester farm, a three-acre affair at the corner of Cedar Street and North Main, which was purchased and the buildings earmarked for restoration, even though they are not eligible because the money used was particular CPF money earmarked for open space. A hearing was recently held to repair these paperwork botch ups by passing retroactive or new laws and that was done.

Meanwhile, in East Hampton Village, it has been found that the purchase of the Hook School House on Main Street in 2008 was not listed on the town's Community Preservation Project Plan at the time it was purchased, and that error, too, is being repaired.

In other news, the construction of the new Town Hall in East Hampton from the historic 17th century saltboxes and outbuildings graciously donated to the Town Hall property two years ago by Ted Carpenter and Adelaide de Menil has simply stopped. It's right on the highway and it is easy to see there are now no workmen there during the workday. This project, which requires the conversion of these seven old buildings for 21st century use on the inside, was supposed to cost $4 million, then $6 million and now appears headed up toward $10 million. The donors of the houses made a contribution of $1 million toward the project after they gave these houses to the Town for free and paid to have them moved there. Last week, they donated another $400,000.

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Driving Me Crazy

There are many reasons to go off-island. Some people go shopping, some go to see relatives, some even work off-island, making the trip back and forth every day. When off-island, for whatever reason, it's important to remember that the ways of the off-island people are not the same as Islanders.

When off-island:

1. Do not assume you can park anywhere close to your destination. If you go to BJ's or some other big store, you may have to park across an entire parking lot. Take a pen and sketch a map on your palm of where your car is.

2. If you have parked in some obscure corner of a big parking lot, don't assume you will remember where you parked when you emerge from the store, you probably won't, that's why you should have made a map on your hand like I told you.

3. Don't bother asking off-islanders if they saw where you parked your car. Only islanders know each other's cars and pay attention to where you parked, or should not have parked, your car.

4. Don't talk to off-islanders in a grocery store. They don't know what's available at the local farm stands to supplement what you're buying in the store, nor do they care. Very few off-islanders can carry on a conversation about squashes and cooking techniques for more than two minutes. Off-islanders have Podcast news broadcasts, which they download on their computers. Islanders have Peapodcast News, which is standing in the produce aisle in IGA and either listening in, or participating in every conversation. After 20 minutes, you'll be completely caught up on everything going on on-Island.

5. You can drive faster than 40 mph off-island. Please remember that. Off-islanders have this thing that you have to go zooming along on their big fancy highways — I've often hit 50 mph myself.

6. There are traffic lights off-island. Since no one can take turns off-island, the government has had to step in and hang up boxes to tell you when it's your turn to go. The yellow light seems to be open to interpretation, but I notice that women think it means Stop and men think it means Speed Up!

7. All the food we see advertised on television is obtainable off-island. If you buy some, put it in a big black plastic bag and don't open it until you get home and close your shades. If the ferry workers smell French fries, you'll feel so guilty you'll have to hand them over. If your neighbors see you bringing bags of fast food into your house, they'll think of a reason to visit and you'll end up cutting your Big Mac into halves or quarters. Lesson: if you can't bring enough for everybody, have the decency to hide what you have.

8. Resist asking off-island cashiers to hurry up, or you'll miss your boat. They'll always look at you like you already have...

9. If you're single, avoid dating off-islanders. Unless they're very wealthy and marriage minded, it's never worth the ferry tickets. One of the reasons that islanders divorce and marry other islanders is the natural drive in human nature to conserve ferry tickets unless you have at least three reasons to go off-island.

10. Many off-islanders don't even know where Shelter Island is. Always remember the Shelter Island rules. If off-islanders ask where we are, don't tell them. If they ask for directions, misguide them. Confirm all rumors that the government conducts germ warfare tests on Shelter Island. Tell them that one-way ferry tickets cost $50. Tell them the ferries are very safe, we only lost a few hundreds people last year from boats capsizing and sinking.

The off-island world is strange, their customs different, but still, we can avoid contamination through diligence, misguidance, blatant and non-blatant lies, treachery and flame-throwers.

Big Dig in Sag Harbor Finished. On Time.

By T.J. Clemente

The Sag Harbor National Grid "Big Dig" project has ended on Bridge Street, where the huge blue gas ball once stood. The adjacent former military barracks buildings, owned by George Schiavoni, have been taken down and the three enormous blue pumps that removed the toxic tar-like substance below the site are gone. The site is littered with heavy equipment being packed up and it's still fenced in, covered with gravel. The huge tent from which as many as 50 trucks a day carried Level 2 toxic waste out of Sag Harbor is gone. Disasters resulting from errors by the London-based National Grid, which was watched with a keen eye by Sag Harbor resident Julie Moses, did not occur. In a letter, Moses reiterated information, confirmed by a separate correspondence from State of New York Health Officials: At a similar dig in Queens, N.Y. (Sunnyside Yard-Amtrak site) there was a "One day exposure" to similar "Level #2 Hazard Waste."

However, this time around, Ed Deyermund, Village Board of Trustees member and town expert on the National Grid project, (liaison, in his words) proudly stated that nothing like that happened. Rather, the whole project, which started on September 22, 2008, ended on time — a fact Deyermund admitted astounded even him. He predicts that soon an agreement will be reached to make the site a location for town parking, with as many as 80 new spots available before the end of the summer.

As far as the Schiavoni property, Deyermund said the Schiavonis are now in the long process of getting myriad approvals to build on the site, where the contaminated soil was excavated and taken away to be burned. George Schiavoni told me he and his son plan to build something that fits in with the historic character of Sag Harbor in the most tasteful way.

The predicament at the site originated from a manufactured gas facility constructed on the location in 1859, that ran until 1931, at which time gas production ended. However the huge blue ball, called a Hortonsphere gas storage tank, remained on the site owned by Lilco as part of the Long Island gas delivery system until it was dismantled in 2006. Keyspan, a successor to Lilco, signed an agreement on ownership of the site around 1999. National Grid now owns Keyspan or, as they phrase it, Keyspan has become National Grid. The clean up plan was part of an agreement with the New York State Department of Conservation signed on March 31, 2006. (The Record on Decision Remedial Action Work Plan and other documents pertaining to the Sag Harbor site are still available at the John Jermain Public Library in Sag Harbor.)

Memorial for Lynn Barnett, 68

Lynn Barnett, of NYC and Southampton, lost her battle with lung cancer on May 4, 2009. She died at home surrounded by friends.

Born December 29, 1940 and raised in Manhattan, Barnett was a great lover of music, film and theater. She sat on the Board of Directors of The Gerder Lissner Foundation, which provides financial support to young opera singers. Barnett studied classical voice before moving to Paris in her early 20s where she attended La Sorbonne, then worked for Coco Chanel as a PR assistant and translator in the late '60s. She returned to the states fluent in French and with a passion for fine cuisine and cooking. In the early '90s, she opened her company, New Leaf Catering, in East Hampton, and was a private chef for many years.

A devoted friend of Bill W's for 30 years, Barnett positively influenced the lives of hundreds, if not thousands, of people. She will be remembered for her generosity of spirit, keen sense of humor, knack for bringing people together, and "mean" guacamole.

She's survived by her (what else) French poodle, Torrie. A memorial service will be held at the Wainscott Chapel, Saturday, May 30, 2-5 p.m.

Whispers

With Gina Glickman

Despite the current economic recession, this past Holiday weekend in the Hamptons was stronger than ever and the nightlife was no exception. A few cases in point.....

Lily Pond nightclub in East Hampton exploded back onto the late night scene this past Saturday night. VIPs including NHL's Sean Avery and John Legend helped kick off the festivities. As you can see from the photo, love was in the air. Legend spent the entire evening in a private corner booth, snuggled up alongside his girlfriend, Chrissy Teigen. When the two lovebirds weren't cooing, they took mini breaks and hit the dance floor.

Sunday evening in Southampton, the experimental branding partnership between Dune Nightclub and Axe men's grooming products turned out to be a huge success thanks to nightlife dream team; Mike Heller, Matt Shendell, Noah Tepperberg and Jason Strauss. Shendell is confident The Axe Lounge will be the ultimate summer destination and told me, "This summer — we wanna take it to another level. We wanna combine a celebrity environment with performances and just give the clients a better experience for their summer vacation." Hundreds of partygoers and several VIPs including NY Knicks Forward Al Harrington, Paul Sevigny, Super Model Cheyenne, Aaron Reid, DJ Berrie, Mark Packer, Sasha (from "American Idol"), Ashley Bush, Elizabeth Arden's NYC Red Door Salon superstar team — genius colorist "HOLLYWOOD" a.k.a. Holly Bromberg and celebrity hair stylist Jasmine Galazka — partied in the official Axe Lounge while waiting for LMFAO (loving my friends and others) to hit center stage and perform live. At approximately 1 a.m. Amanda Mitchell announced, "LMFAO is here!" Suddenly, two human beat boxes, Sky Blu and Redfoo, arrived on the scene like a tidal wave of Red Bull and instantly lifted the spirits of any club kid in their path. The duo was dressed from head to toe in Party Rock apparel which you can actually purchase at partyrocklife.com. Both artists donned oversized white sunglass frames and boasted, "We wake up in the morning and we dress like this!" Now, don't let these larger than life Electro/Hip-Hop characters fool you — they mean some serious business. Redfoo told me LMFAO has a real mission, "Your dreams! We have a song called 'Everyday I See My Dream' which will get you out of the recession, because you will be thinking what you want, whether it's money, a honey or to be famous." Post photographs and my interview with the group,

TWENTYSOMETHING... By DAVID LION RATTINER

Nearly everybody I know puts pictures of themselves online partying like rock stars. EVERYBODY, from Harvard grads to PhDs to lawyers, has pictures of themselves giving the thumbs up sign with a beer in their hand. It's sort of a way of saying to the world, "Hey, I'm cool because I like to go out and have a good time with other people."

Putting your pictures online is a relatively new thing. Thanks to websites like Facebook and MySpace, anybody with a digital camera can share an unlimited amount of photos with the world. You can even take video of yourself dancing the night away for all the world to see.

I did some deep thinking the other day about what this is going to mean for our future leaders and "adults" of the world. Just about anybody who's in the mood to run for any kind of political office in the next 10 years is going to have some pretty scandalous pictures of themselves that are easy for the public to access. Can you imagine Googling your future doctor and then landing on a MySpace page with pictures of them in their 20s doing a keg stand?

What I think would be even weirder are pictures of a future presidential candidate making a funny face at a frat party and a video of him or her playing beer pong. And what if these pictures sway people, and the parties then seek out people who never used Facebook? Would you vote for a guy 20 years from now who never made a Facebook page while in college?

I have to tie this in somehow here, so I'm going to just say that Terminator Salvation is unbelievably awesome. Watching this movie, I saw my entire life come full circle. I can remember vividly being nine years old and watching Terminator 2 with my father at a private theater with the Udell's (who own London Jewelers out here) and having a complete moment of "Oh my God" for the next decade. Terminator 3 was a complete disappointment and I went into Terminator Salvation without any hesitation, but not super high expectations. Dear God, what a movie! I was so unbelievably impressed on so many different levels — highly recommend it. It's awesome.

Anyway, I read that Star Trek was fantastic as well and felt a huge sense of urgency to invest some of my 401K, which is a pathetic amount of money but money nonetheless, into entertainment stock. I can't remember the last time so many good movies were lined up for the summer.

I spent about four hours online researching movie stocks and started to think about how attractive Time Warner (TWX) was looking. I wasn't thrilled about a horrendous negative EPS or its ugly hit in the last year, but hey, I really like their movies. I then realized that I was seriously thinking about buying a stock after watching a movie and that Time Warner has AOL — a business I don't like. Suddenly I got an alert message on my Blackberry that a picture of me was "tagged" on Facebook. I had a look and sure enough, there was my mug with a big smile at Montauk's The Surf Lodge, where I was the night before letting loose.

I guess I'll never be President of the United States.

stance have been removed. Deyermond said that the monitoring devices used by the pumps never showed any form of danger at any time. Some residents in North Haven are questioning that, but the New York State Health Department has certified that National Grid's claims are true.

National Grid contracted the project out to AE COM. It was run by Tom Shuck, who had experience on similar projects. National Grid had Ted Liessing on site, but it was Shuck's plan that was successful, save for one water main break early on that was repaired, as Deyermond said, at no cost to the taxpayers. A 32-year veteran in local politics (including a stint as mayor), Deyermond stated the job was done, "Professionally. It was well done, well managed. I was proud to be a part of it."

Deyermond, who has also been a department head for both towns of East Hampton and Southampton, spent the Memorial Day weekend personally supervising the paving and reopening of Bridge Street. He said he will not be a trustee this next election cycle but "After 32 years it's time for a new challenge!" He said the new challenge may still involve local politics, ruling nothing out.

So a project that I wrote might not finish on time, did. That might have posed a threat to local residents of Sag Harbor, didn't. That would create huge inconveniences, didn't. Before the work began, I firmly questioned Ed Deyermond and National Grid's promises to get the job done on time and safely. Well Ed, you were right and I was wrong.

THE CHOICE OF ARCHITECTS, INTERIOR DESIGNERS, AND WINDOW TREATMENT COMPANIES

rooms and 27 baths by Henry DuPont as a summer home in 1927. I have seen the plans for this house. Among other things, in each room, there is drawn where all the furniture, the beds and sofas and night tables and so forth go. If something were awry, DuPont would know about it. DuPont called the mansion "Chesterton." He and his family and their servants and then their descendants lived there as part of Southampton society until the early 1950s when, essentially, this grand, brick three-story affair became abandoned.

It remained abandoned for 20 years. And then Barry Trupin, who may or may not be in jail as I write this, bought "Chesterton" as a present for his beautiful young wife, Renee. The two of them would turn it into a magnificent French Chateau. And they would be accepted and invited into Southampton society.

The 1970s, as it turned out, was not a good time to buy yourself into Southampton society, particularly if the husband is a shady businessman and his wife, beautiful as she might be, is the daughter of a military officer used to moving around from place to place. Those were not the official reasons, however, why Southampton society wanted these people gone from Southampton. The official reason was that Renee and Barry were not "our kind of people." In other words, she was Catholic. He was a Jew.

Also, the turrets were being built higher than allowed without proper variances.

A tremendous battle ensued during the years of 1981 and 1982, as the Trupins proceeded to spend tens of millions of dollars on renovating their house and converting it into a French castle complete with turrets. They did complete it, or almost complete it. But in the end, after a mayor was forced to resign for giving the Trupins a building permit, after a Southampton matron was quoted making an anti-semitic remark about the Trupins in New York Magazine, after a stop work order and a calculated shunning by the powers that be in Southampton took place, Barry just got mad. He filed a lawsuit against the Village of Southampton for violating his civil rights. And he won. The Village appealed. They had no choice but to appeal, because in spite of their insurance coverage, to pay the Trupins the amount the judge awarded them for doing what they did to them would force the Village into bankruptcy.

Amazingly, the appeals judge overturned the ruling on a technicality and the Trupins left town, with their castle abandoned.

During the two years that this battle went on, the Trupins were never allowed to be in residence at their home. There was no CO. However, they did sleep there surreptitiously from time to time. Renee, when giving me a tour of the place on one occasion, showed me the partially completed bedroom and bath where they camped out.

"This was the only place in the house where we had running water," she told me gleefully. "We did this from time to time."

During the construction, fine craftsmen from Italy who did not speak English were living in trailers on the property, there to build the elaborate carvings and quoins and balustrades that were to be part of the architecture of this house. Panneloads of European antiques and suits of armor were brought in. No expense was spared.

Amazingly, Barry and Renee rented another house five houses down on the ocean from their French castle under construction, which had a fantastic and bizarre history of its own.

The house they rented, another old mansion, had been the home in the early 1970s of a man who got murdered. He was another shady character. This former owner was Roy Radin, a young man who began a boiler room telephone telemarketing business at the age of 22 and was, by the time he was 28, one of the richest men in town.

You'd see him on Jobs Lane, this very obese man with a black cape, a silver handled cane and a great shock of long hair. He had a predilection for wild sex parties that featured whips, chains, drugs and alcohol and even a taping system where he could make permanent records of the proceedings on videotape. His mother lived at the house too. They were discrete about these

by Susan Galardi

Last week, for fans of "American Idol" who lived through hour after grueling hour of the show (it was one of the snowiest winters on the East End), it all came to a crashing halt when Kris Allen — and not Adam Lambert — won.

I was disappointed but not surprised. I'd felt all along that boyish, clean cut Allen would ultimately win out over Lambert, whose vocal and physical presence are larger than life. Lambert wears sexuality on his pant leg as well as his sleeve. He is the 21st century Elvis — in fact I noticed throughout the season that suddenly the cameras would cut away to shots of him from the waist up.

Lambert is a star. A riveting presence with his dramatic style and that certain vocal something. I talked about this years ago with Cynthia Daniels, a Grammy award-winning producer who has a recording studio and lives in East Hampton. We were discussing what makes A/R people choose one singer over another. It's not the 'perfect' vocal tone from a voice teacher's perspective (think of Joe Cocker, Janis Joplin). It's some other sound quality — one that grabs your ear for some undefined emotional or aesthetic reason, that comes through even in recordings.

Lambert has that quality and so much more — maybe too much for "Idol's" teeny-bopper audience. He may be threatening for the "Idol" demographic, which I assumed was teen and 'tween girls more attracted to the Davy Jones/David Cassidy boyishness of Allen.

But apparently, according to the Los Angeles Times, the median age of the show's viewing audience is almost 43. So are older folks, particularly women, doing the choosing? Some "Idol" bloggers share the theory that middle-aged women are making the picks. Moms. If I were the mom of a 12-year-old girl, whose poster would I prefer she had hanging in her room? The pubescent, annoyingly humble, boy next door Allen, or the confident, manly Lambert? (Being a musician myself, I'd prefer she choose Lambert.)

But after all, "Idol" isn't only about singing nor is it an industry star search. It's a popularity contest. That became painfully obvious when the top 13 showed their stuff in the last show. The duet with Megan Joy and roughneck Michael Sarver, singing to Steve Martin playing banjo?

A train wreck. Scott Macintyre? If only there were a B-rated Paul Simon to his B-rated Garfunkle. Anoop? A joke.

Yet these were among the top 13 — earning millions of votes each. How can that be?

Because when you watch any game show week after week, you get caught up in the contest and become numb to the mediocrity. It's like eating at McDonald's every day and voting with millions on which sandwich is the best. Eventually, you'll find a standout, maybe a Big Mac. It's not great or even good food, but it's the best thing in front of you.

When my partner and I watched the show and started to get caught up in the "Yeah, he is pretty good," something always came to my mind. As a student at the Manhattan School of Music, I'd have grueling master classes and workshops where the voice teachers would parties. Except once.

The police raided one such party at Radin's house after one of the hundred or so participants, a young woman in a cocktail dress, had been put on a Long Island Railroad train for the ride back to New York City in a slobbering drugged state where, on the train at midnight, not knowing where she was, people came to her aid and learned from where she had come.

The following year, Radin decided he wanted to produce motion pictures. There was a plan to make a movie called Cotton Club. He flew to Los Angeles where he apparently began to pal around with other investors, drug dealers, and who did not want Radin involved. Radin's body, with a bullet in the back of his head, was found in a canyon outside of Los Angeles one day by a park ranger. He was 32.

What kind of luck does it take for a handsome young couple such as Barry and Renee, flush with money, to wind up renting a star crossed orgy mansion five houses down from the dream castle they were building against the wishes of the powers that be in the Southampton summer community?

Barry, as I mentioned, may or may not be in jail today. He got caught up in the Savings and Loan scandal. He got arrested and convicted of buying wildly expensive impressionist paintings and antiques from a New York dealer at rock bottom prices because, well, they had been stolen.

When the Trupins left Southampton in the late 1980s, Barry vowed to sell Dragon's Head to either drug dealers or homeless shelter operators. But, of course, none of those stepped up to the plate. As Chesterton had remained abandoned for 20 years, the house that Barry and Renee had renamed "Dragon's Head" remained vacant after they left for 12 more ears.

Eventually it was picked up for pocket change — well, $3 million — by a prominent and upstanding New York City developer named Francesco Galesi who made peace with the community, tore down some of the offending turrets that had been ruled to have been built too high, and used it as a summer home for his family for the next 15 years.

In 2005, Galesi, having paid the vast heating and maintenance bills for all those years, was told by brokers that if he wanted to sell the place they could probably get more than $20 million for it. Galesi thought it a good idea.

I don't know how much Klein paid for it, but now I have brought you up to date. "Dragon's Head" is coming down. What will be there in its place, probably by this time next year, will be a glass and stone modern structure designed by Richard Meier.

In one of her letters, Renee D'Aunay did tell me this: When she first stood on the bluff behind the abandoned DuPont house where the sun rose and the mist from the waves billowed up into the morning sunshine, she felt its magic and she wanted it. Even from Cote d'Azur, she remembers this. And so do I, about that spot anyway. I remember a wonderful luncheon we had with Barry and Renee on a terrace the Trupins built behind the house, under a silk canopy held up by medieval spears, with uniformed servants bustling about. As I recall, the catch of the day was poached salmon. The wind blew and blew, the silk rippled, the wine flowed and the mist billowed in from the sea below on what was surely a great day to be in the Hamptons.

We'll move you across town

split hairs over the balance of head and chest resonance, the difference between the nasal 'an' and 'in' in French diction, and whether or not an improvised run was stylistically appropriate for Bellini. During one session, the head of the department, Met Diva Helen Vanni, stood up and said, "There is one thing you have to ask yourself when you get up on the stage to sing: 'Would I pay to hear THAT?'"

The "Idol" tour is in more than 50 locations this summer. Plenty of people will pay to hear that. I'll wait until Adam Lambert does his first live show — whether a concert or star turn on Broadway. It'll pay to be there.

HONORING THE ARTIST: JOANNE ROSKO

This week's cover artist, Joanne Rosko, is a multi-talented person who brings a varied background to her creations. "Fog Rolling In," an expressionistic view of fog coming across the dunes, validates her work as a plein air artist (and member of the group, Peconic Plein Air), and gives a nod to her career as a perennial landscape designer and a student of children's art. An artist with many interests, Rosko, who has a love of photography, also curates art exhibits (for Southampton Artists Alliance). This background has influenced her art in many intriguing ways.

Q: Your background is wide-ranging. Let's be specific. First, how about your mother's influence on your love of art?

A: I remember my mother giving me and my siblings things to do before dinner so we wouldn't bother her. We could write poetry or sing a song. I drew a picture. Then we would give a performance before dinner.

Q: I can imagine you encouraged your own children when they were growing up.

A: Yes. We went to the beach a lot and worked in the sand. I also encouraged them to set the table in artistic ways; they would have classical music playing and candlelight. I also like to play a lot with my grandchildren and watch how their brains work.

Q: Second, your training in art was a good professional start.

A: I went to Hamilton College and studied art, but I also studied with artists like Diane Maxwell Smith and Miriam Douganis.

Q: When you went back to school and studied early education, was that a turning point?

A: I love children and I love watching them working. I had an epiphany when I experienced that. I learned to play with materials in the art classes.

Q: How did that experience influence your own art?

A: It brought me freedom. I didn't have to paint to perform.

Q: How was your art different as a result of this attitude?

A: Sometimes my art looks a little different, perspective-wise. Sometimes I paint an image in close-up.

Q: How did your career in landscape design influence your art?

A: It made me aware of shapes and colors. And since I worked with flowers, I really love the work of Georgia O'Keeffe. I went to visit her home in New Mexico. She lived so simply. I have great respect for people who live what they believe.

Q: Does your landscape background show up in other ways?

A: I love photography so I take pictures of my garden, sometimes a close-up view, sometimes a whole view.

Q: Are you working on other things, experimenting with other kinds of media or styles?

A: I just finished a landscape that is more modern. It's not abstract but is in that vein. I also broke my back, and I plan on turning my brace into a sculpture, with a drawer where words are spilling out.

Q: This sounds like conceptual art, which is quite a bit different for you. How does this relate to your idea of opposites?

A: I have mixed emotions about using my brace as a sculpture. Strong emotions bring out opposites. Also, it's finding the good in a bad experience. That's using opposites, too.

ESTATE OF MIND

Real Estate Rants and Rumbings

by Rebecca Schiller

May 19 was "Grievance Day" in Southampton — the one day out of the year when homeowners could challenge the town's figures on the current value of their properties. Nearly 9,900 Southampton Town residents got notices about an increase in the assessed values of their homes.

To understand the ins-and-outs of residential property assessment, visit the New York State Office of Real Property Services website. It explains in great detail how the town assessor keeps assessments up-to-date and equitable each year, ensuring that tax payers don't pay more or less than their fair share.

In a nutshell, residential property assessments are estimates of the market value of real property in a given community. In other words, the market value is how much the property would sell for under normal conditions (normal being the operative word in this economy). The assessor determines market value by comparing similar properties in similar neighborhoods ("comps") and estimates how factors like home additions or new construction might affect the market value.

New York State law requires all properties (except those in New York City and Nassau County) to be assessed at a uniform percentage value within the community every year. Each assessment is a percentage of market value — called the Level of Assessment (LOA). An LOA of 50% means that assessments are at half the market value; an LOA of 100% means that a town (such as Southampton or Shelter Island) is assessing at full market value. Therefore, if the market value of a home is $100,000 and the town is assessing at 100% of market value, the property's assessment should be $100,000.

The Airing of Grievances

Each year, to maintain a uniform LOA, the assessor will analyze all the properties in the area to determine which assessments need to be changed. Assuming that the assessments have been kept up-to-date and market conditions have been relatively stable, not many assessments will need to be adjusted.

In this economy, it's a tricky situation. Current assessment does not reflect the current economic situation. The recent assessments were conducted from July 1, 2007 (prior to the official start of the recession) through July 8, 2008. Homeowners who question whether the assessor has the correct information can check with the assessor's office and see if all the data for that property is accurate. Should the owner believe that his property has been over-assessed based on market value of the home, he can arrange for an informal review with assessment officials. This could prove to have a better outcome for the homeowner. According to John Cronin, former Shelter Island town, assessor, "During an assessment review, assessments can be lowered or stay the same, but never increased according to state law."

However, if the homeowner still feels that his property was over-assessed, he may request a formal review. To file, application instructions and deadlines can be found on the New York State Office of Real Property Services website.

By the Book Dickens Redux Part 1: French Revolution

by P. J. Mills

Recently, I felt an urgent need to reconsider the French Revolution, or, more specifically, the Reign of Terror that followed on its heels. This quest started when I came across A Place of Greater Safety, a historical novel about the revolution by the British writer Hilary Mantel. Mantel's story revolves around three leaders of the revolution, George-Jacques Danton, Maximilien Robespierre, and Camille Desmoulins, and their families, friends, and lovers. It is a tour de force that eloquently details the facts of the revolution through dramatic portraits of the famous and infamous figures of the time.

Yet the why of the Terror remains elusive in this epic novel. Unsatisfied, I toyed with the idea of reading some "real" history, but Simon Schama's Citizens: A Chronicle of the French Revolution looked dry and daunting (all 1,000 pages of it); and I couldn't seem to summon the heart to read Thomas Carlyle's classic, The French Revolution: A History, at a mere 400 pages. Then I thought of Dickens's A Tale of Two Cities and found in a bookshop the wonderful Vintage Classics edition, with an Introduction by the very Simon Schama whose book I'd rejected. Not only that, but in the Preface written by Dickens (which I had long forgotten) he offers a loving "thank you" to "Mr. Carlyle" for his informative book on the French Revolution and for personally lending him original source material and books from his own library. I was home free!

Dickens had relied upon Carlyle's research, so by reading Dickens, I told myself, I had no need to read Carlyle.

A Tale of Two Cities does exactly what I wanted a book about the French Revolution to do: It tells a compelling story filled with memorable characters like Madame Defarge, knitting away in her mad frenzy of revenge, and brilliantly sums up the why of the Terror in a few deft phrases. There is, of course, the well-known first line of the book: "It was the best of times, it was the worst of times ..." But towards the end of the book I found what I was seeking. There, Dickens describes the Reign of Terror as "a frightful moral disorder" and "the suicidal vengeance of the Revolution." For him the Terror was caused by the same things that had led to the overthrow of the monarchy: the "unspeakable suffering, intolerable oppression, and heartless indifference" of the Ancien Régime. Once the revolutionaries unleashed the violent forces of revolution in the name of liberté, égalité, fraternité, they could not control them. These forces took on a momentum of their own, spawning a mindless and indiscriminate wave of mob violence and bloodshed that contaminated the relationships among the revolutionaries, twisting their idealism and desire for social justice into an internecine killing spree in which the guillotine reigned supreme.

I finished A Tale of Two Cities with a great sigh of satisfaction and thought of having a mini-Dickens-fest over the summer. What to read next? Hard Times? Bleak House? Little Dorrit? All of these books appealed to me because they seemed to resonate with our own "hard times." A fierce critic of the injustice and poverty of Victorian society, Dickens offers a profound understanding of the human cost of class differences brought about by the rise of capitalism and the industrial revolution, where great wealth was achieved through the exploitation of poor "unfortunates," people confined to the very bottom of the socio-economic system. In his stories he condemns debtors' prisons; money speculation that leads to the collapse of banks; the poorly run bureaucracy of the British Treasury (which, like all bureaucracies, seems like an animal with many hands and no head or heart); and the British court system, where the cost of litigation fills the coffers of lawyers while bankrupting their clients.

Dickens has a remarkable grasp of the machinations of institutional corruption, the mediating role of organized labor, and the workings of money. Presenting all this insight in cautionary tales of woe and redemption, Dickens conjures up a delightful roster of characters with the most whimsical names. Taking Mr. Gradgrind, Mrs. Sparsit, Inspector Bucket, Miss Flite, Prince Turveydrop, and Peepy Jellyby on an outing to the beach sounds like The Very Bestest Thing To Do for a summertime Dickens-fest.

A Tale of Two Cities, By Charles Dickens, 380 pages, Vintage Classics, Random House.

KING OF THE HAMPTONS

THE MOVIE 2009

SCENE 2: I'm 9. I swing the broom at a ball of tape. The tape soars over the roof. I circle the driveway. The imaginary crowd in my garage cheers. I'm 13. I hold a hairbrush to my lips with my left hand. Holding a hairspray bottle in my right, I just won an Oscar. I thank the Academy inside the medicine cabinet. I'm 17 with tight abs and long hair. Ok a mullet, but it looked cool cruising Hempstead Turnpike.

Now I'm 40. I'm stuck on Rt. 27 in Bridgehampton. I'm not a Yankee or a movie director. The abs are gone. My hair is graying. It's half time in the game of life. What happened?

After thirty days, my Hamptons adventure is not what I expected. I'm still bored and old.

My three kids and pregnant wife are home in Massapequa. I'm chilling in my East Hampton summerhouse. The Yankees are on TV. I've downed four beers in seven innings. Derek Jeter twists his ankle. I spring from the sofa and grab the broom. It's time to practice. George Steinbrenner will be calling. "Hey Lynch, you still a short-stop, we need you!"

I swing the broom in slow motion and think, "I still got it." My phone rings. I'm spooked. Could it be? I quiver, "Hello?" The reply, "My name is George, is this Mr. Lynch?" I reply, "Yes. Mr. Steinbrenner?" A second of silence and then a computerized voice: "This call may be recorded for quality assurance." George is back, only he's from Washington Mutual. It's a courtesy call. The mortgage is 3-days late.

Jeter's ankle is fine. I open beer five and stare in the mirror. I want a second chance to do something great. My reflection says, "This adventure is your second chance, dummy." I snap out of it.

If the Yanks won't call, I still have the hairbrush. Adios' George Steinbrenner. Hello George Lucas. I can dream of Oscar, can't I? They give gold statues to old guys. My camera is ready to roll. I call the A-list Hamptonite I met a few weeks ago. "Get me to the front of the line and lets make movie magic." My Hamptonite agrees.

Two weeks pass. The lines we cut are at CVS and a pizza joint in Amagansett. Where's my Hamptonite's king power? This adventure is moving slower than Hampton traffic. Something needs to change and it aint the red light I'm stuck at.

King of the Hamptons is the unscripted adventure I took with a stranger in 2008. Each week leading up to Labor Day, this article will reflect some of the wild and surreal events, people and places I experienced. Hopefully it entices you to see the movie this October. Maybe the combination of both will help you determine if it's time for you to make the leap from ordinary to extraordinary. Or maybe it convinces you to stay where you are? ## Swan (continued from page 15) of the pond, one on the shore facing north, the other on the shore facing south. Motorists from both directions could see the message. FOR YOUR OWN SAFETY, PLEASE STAY A GOOD DISTANCE FROM THE SWANS.

This sign was not a village sign. No mayor or village council had voted to put that sign there. It was put up by some private citizens, fully aware of the ineptitude of their fellow homo sapiens, and, of course, allowed to remain there by the town. In any case, it was widely ignored because some of the humans still wanted to see the male fluff up and chase them, flapping madly as it came out of the pond and over to their cars to peck at them until his pecking drove them off.

I would go down James Lane to see all the goings on too. I was not of a mind to bait the male swan, but on one occasion, when he had come up to peck at a Buick that had gotten too close, I pulled in behind it to wait my turn with the swan, much like one might wait one's turn at a car wash.

Swan pecks make no dent, but they do make a hammering sound on the side of the car, which puts one in mind of scads of money departing your wallet. On later inspection, however, it is found that there are only little streaks in the car where the swan has pecked, easily removed with a cloth. They are, I thought when I first saw them, signs of respectful combat. I rubbed off one, but left the rest as a mark of valor, I suppose, or stupidity, or of helping the swan get rid of his anger or on behalf of humanity defending the sanctity of the pavement of James Lane.

Two weeks ago on Thursday, I saw a line of cars on the James Lane side by the nest. It was about noon. I drove along and parked on the other side of the lane. The signs were still up, but the people about were now more venturesome, going down to the water's edge to look closely at the nest, which, at this point, had nothing in it but cracked egg shells.

At the foot of the nest was mama swan with her baby chicks. The mama was on one side, the papa on the other, hemming them in, looking down at them, sort of gathering them together in a fluffy yellow melee of splashing little bits of new life.

"When did this happen?" I asked somebody.

"Early this morning."

The male swan seemed at peace with the world. He looked so proud. I took out my camera and began to take some pictures.

As I did, however, I heard the murmuring of the crowd. The male was fluffing up, preparing to attack. I joined everybody else making a run for it, and got out of there unscathed only because I had parked across the way and the male had to deal with a Honda that was parked on the other side of the street.

I had at first thought that day that the signs, still up, were perhaps up because the person who had put them up had not yet noticed the new state of affairs. But after the assault, I thought whoever put them up knew more about male swan behavior than the rest of us.

It's now been a week since the swans have been born. I still go by there twice a day, off to work and back from work. And the situation has slowly evolved.

In the first two days, the two adults showed their little brood everything to be seen near to the nest. They weren't climbing up into the nest at night or anything. But they'd hang around close to it night and day. The signs stayed up.

A day later, I noticed that this little squadron, with the mom on one side and the pop on the other, were venturing farther out into the pond to show the kids more things. Once I saw them by the reeds on the James Lane side, halfway down to the far end of the pond, with the seven little chicks splashing about in an opening, bathing themselves while their parents watched. On another day, I saw them in the middle of the pond, the chicks no longer in the protective embrace of the two swans but swimming about on their own a few yards from them.

Still another time, coming down the Montauk Highway side, I saw no swans whatsoever. I was alarmed. Had somebody come by and seized them? Had there been complaints from someone that he was going to sue the Village because of a peck and the authorities had gathered up the swans and moved them out of town?

I didn't call anybody when I saw that situation although I thought about it. I did think I would await developments. The next time I passed the pond, I found the family picnicking in the grass on the eastern shore of the pond. I came to the conclusion I had just not been looking the right way the last time I'd gone by.

Yesterday, with the swan family paddling about in the middle of the pond and the little chicks looking noticeably bigger and plumper, I also saw that the signs were gone. Clearly, papa's angry days were behind him. He was now his usual peaceful self, proud of his family and only getting a bit stirred up if somebody provoked him or his family up close and personal.

Now, we can watch the kids grow. If we only can get these guys to pose for photographs all lined up in a row facing the camera. Would that be too much to ask?

Givin' You the BUSINESS

By T.J. Clemente

A stroll up and down Sag Harbor is a walk through American history. Many storefronts still look just as they did when they survived the pre Civil War fires 150 years ago. However each year some new businesses come to Main Street to give it a go in places where perhaps whaling goods or confectionaries were once located back in the day. This year with so many uncertainties clouding optimism, some bold entrepreneurs are striking out to give it their all in the quest of the American dream: owning your own business, being your own boss and making it all happen.

One prime example is the young Nikki Eve Aarons, the owner of "Nikki Eve," a vintage clothing store that has just opened at 17 Madison Street. Nikki Eve is a vintage clothing store with jewelry and healing stones. The vintage clothing is from all eras with a focus on famous British designers from the 1960s-1970s rock and roll generation, such as Cossie Clark, Zandra Rhodes, Celia Birtwell and Mary Quant. The 20-something Nikki Eve says she is, "Offering a new perspective on vintage clothing in Sag Harbor!" The shop was full of positive energy and tidy enthusiasm.

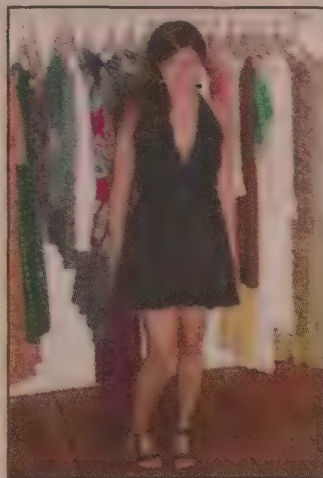

Another shop owner launching her first full season is Lisa Perry, whose shop, Lisa Perry, is located on 45 Main Street, next to the American Hotel. (There is also a Lisa Perry in Soho.) The cheerful, bold yet tasteful clothing and accessories invite the eye to celebrate life in the moment and colors of enjoyment. Also new, at 29 Main Street, is PHAO Thai Kitchen. This new venue offers some new delicious options for both lunch and dinner in Sag Harbor. When I peeked in, the aromas and smells drove me wild with enthusiasm to come back and experience the fine cuisine.

The new business that intrigued me the most was a small new shop, Pailletts, (which is French for "sequence") with the official address of 78 Main Street #14.

It's downstairs from the Java Nation coffee shop in that courtyard by the movie theater. Not easy to find, but worth it since the designs of Swiss born Danielle Tisiger were amazing. Using subtle fabrics, the dresses are made by Tisiger, and thus are all originals. Duscha, an attendant at the store (who is also Swiss), explained that the pottery for sale is by local artists. I consider this shop a must see!

In terms of development in Sag Harbor, the concierge condo complex, 21 Water, is steaming ahead. A group of Prudential Douglas Elliman real estate agents toured the construction site last week, and said it is looking impressive.

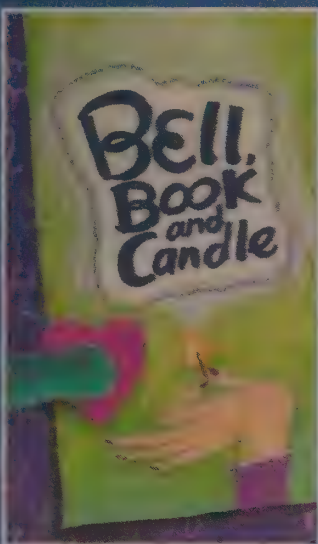

Nikki Eve Aarons

After speaking with a town councilman, I was led to believe that the Bulova condo development is now dead in the water although the official line is "seeking financing." Although the developers overcame all the obstacles the approval process threw in their way, the turning economy has weighted the momentum down to a halt. Hopefully somehow things will heat up again, but at the moment it seems it will remain as it is — an unfortunate eyesore looming over the north entrance to the village.

The beauty of Sag Harbor is that it's not dominated by international chain designer stores like Ralph Lauren and J. Crew. Instead it has a distinctive historical, artistic, home-spun edge that personifies small town America at its best. Walking up and down its historic streets is a summer treat for all who take the time to stroll through history while enjoying the same view Indians did when Sag Harbor was founded in 1707. Hopefully all the new businesses will thrive and survive and add new life to the village while not affecting its unique charm. The sun sets slower for some reason in Sag Harbor. Go there and experience it.

THE HAMPTON SUBWAY NEWSLETTER

"Along with the New York Subway System, Hampton's Subway is the only underground transit system in the State of New York."

By Dan Rattiner

Week of May 31 – June 5, 2009

Riders this week: 23,414

Rider miles this week: 200,432

DOWN IN THE TUBE

Liza Minnelli took the subway from Westhampton Beach, where she was staying, to East Hampton, where she performed to a sold-out audience at Guild Hall's opening night last Saturday. She looked great, as always.

RECORD WEEK FOR SUBWAY

More people rode the Hampton Subway over the Memorial Day weekend than on any week in the history of the subway. All through the Hamptons, the crowds were enormous, as tourists and summer people clogged the streets. Our Commissioner believes that the rich who come out here might have been financially dented by the big economic downturn, but one thing they are not giving up is their treasured summer in the Hamptons. The helicopter business might be off and the private plane business might be off, but the usual crowd is coming out here and though they can still swagger around about that, they might be going home at the end of the evening with a $2 ride on Hampton Subway. That's the way he sees it anyway.

FIRE DRILL MELEE

The Hampton Subway conducted a surprise fire drill at 11 a.m. last Saturday. But it was not a success. The trains were supposed to go to the next station, the straphangers leave the cars, and go up the escalators to the street. But at least half the motormen stopped their trains in their tracks, and the passengers had to be led down the narrow pathways to the stations along the third rail. Also, with the siren noise of the fire drill, the authorities above ground thought it was some sort of enemy attack and sent everybody in all the towns streaming down to the subway platforms where it was safe. So in the end, there were people going in both directions. It wasn't good.

And then it got worse. Less than an hour after the drill ended, a fire DID break out in the subway, in the La Someille dining car on the train between Water Mill and Southampton when a waiter, delivering a chicken flambé dish set fire to the lace curtains and then the entire dining car itself. The diners were evacuated to adjacent cars, the alarms sounded and this time everybody, believing it was another drill, stayed right where they were. Only one woman, a trophy wife who did not want her name used, was injured. She suffered singed eyebrows from the wayward flambé. Overall, it was a traumatic and entirely unsuccessful day indeed.

BOOK READING AT THE OMNI MAY 30

On Saturday at 11 a.m., author Dan Rattiner will read from his new book, One Year on the Hampton Subway, in the waiting room of the Omni, the headquarters for the Hampton Jitney in Southampton on County Road 39. All are welcome.

The section of the book he will read will be the account of the horrible death of the "Voice of the Hampton Subway," Gladys Gooding, the beloved woman would say, "Watch out for the closing doors" over the loud speakers year after year.

COMMISSIONER ASPINALL'S MESSAGE

I would like to clarify our pet policy to our riders. Welcome on any car on any subway train are small, cute dogs of the following breeds: toy poodles, bichons, shih tzus and French bulldogs. They must be on leashes and they must be wearing the purple, pink and green bows that will be handed out free by token booth operators who will test the dog's attitude by placing a hand in front of the dog's mouth at ribbon pick up time, and if the dog does not bite, do so. Small cute dogs of the above breeds do NOT mean full grown poodles or black labs or cockapoos or cats of any kind or boa constrictors or giraffes, one of which, I am told, incredibly, was recently brought onto a train at Quogue headed east and taken two stops before the conductors came and gave him the old heave ho, even though it was not his stop.

Love Lane Kitchen

240 Love Lane, Mattituck, 631-298-8989

It is now three years since Mike Avella opened his restaurant on Mattituck's charmingly old-fashioned Love Lane. In that time he and his enthusiastic and charming staff have created something to be very proud of. Since we were last there, the interior has been significantly upgraded, their liquor license has been obtained and they have managed to create an ambience, which is both welcoming and simply elegant.

Ben Warner is the new Executive Chef and is a graduate of the Western Culinary Institute in Portland, Oregon, and has cooked in Seattle and Manhattan before coming here. The new menu is the result of close collaboration between him and Mike and they make changes to reflect the availability of local produce and also to introduce new ideas.

Straightaway we saw several appetizer dishes that simply cried out to be sampled. The shaved baby artichoke salad was an excellent start with a crisp astringency that really cleansed the palate. Another salad, but one with a totally different set of tastes, was the wilted spinach and mushroom served with a feta vinaigrette and topped by a perfectly cooked poached egg. When the egg is broken and the colors and tastes blend, this is a super salad and good enough to be a house signature dish. Finally came a stew of clams and chorizo with garlic toast points that really worked. It would have been only too easy for the clams to be swamped by the saltiness and strong taste of the chorizo but this dish showed how a talented chef can bring such dissimilar items together to create a dish where the blend is greater than the sum of the individual components. True synergy.

Selection of our entrées also posed problems. In the end we settled for a grilled swordfish that turned out to be without doubt one of the best ever. Swordfish can so easily be overcooked but this was incredibly moist and light. Duck tagine is not your standard Long Island duck with a fruity sauce, good though that often is. A tagine is a North African pot, which is used to cook food for a long time. The bell shaped tagine was presented at the table and the tender duck cooked with almonds, citrus and bell pepper and many different herbs and spices was fragrant and had enough spiciness to give the dish a nice warmth. We also found some space to taste a vegetarian dish of fresh crepes rolled around braised wild mushrooms with leeks and vermouth. This was so good and shows how vegetarian food can truly be innovative and very tasty.

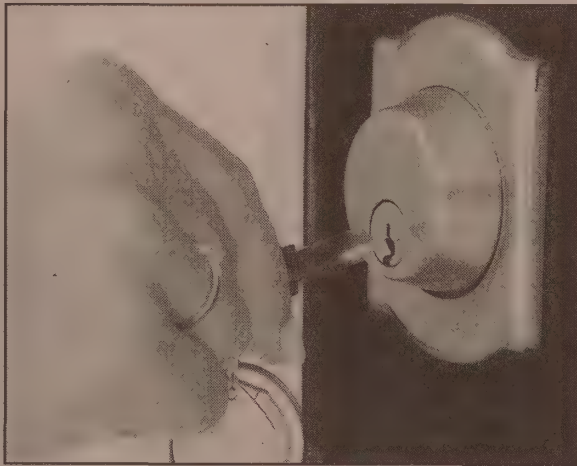

Desserts are made by General Manager Jennilee Morris's mother and the lemon semi-freddo we enjoyed was decadently wonderful with its soft richness and beautiful tangy citrus taste. This brought a very tasty and enjoyable meal to a close as we sipped espresso coffee that also displayed the talents of Mike and his staff in the art of coffee making. Coffee is a significant part of the operation as they source, roast and grind coffee for retail sale, as well as for restaurant use. Mike loves to talk coffee so never be afraid to ask about the dos and don'ts of coffee preparation.

Not content with running a restaurant that opens every day for breakfast and lunch and currently, Wednesday through Sunday for dinner, plus the thriving coffee business, they also have a growing catering business that will cater for casual style buffet events for up to 100 people. For Valentine's Day they offered to deliver (or for pick up) a special 'Breakfast in Bed' package of quiche, French toast, pastries etc. that must have charmed the fortunate recipients.

Where else are you going to find Atlantic salmon crusted with an Egyptian blend of spices called Dukkar? Appetizers range from $10 to $12: entrées from $12 to $26. The wine list is short and well chosen with wines from Long Island and Italy only. By the glass they range from $7 to $10 and bottles start at $18. It would be hard to imagine any group of people more upbeat, professional and dedicated in their approach to giving their customer a great meal. By any standards, Love Lane Kitchen is now one of the best eating places on eastern Long Island for quality and value. In a previous review I commented that this is a restaurant I would love to have in my hometown and I feel this even more strongly after this last visit.

-Roy Bradbrook

Beauty/Fashion

Raving Beauty By Janet Flora

Dare to Go Bare

Brown spots, broken capillaries, blotchy skin, and acne, at any age, can make you feel like you need to cover up with makeup even in the summertime. But according to Dr. Francesca Fusco, a dermatologist who practices medical and cosmetic dermatology at the Wexler Group in Manhattan, with a focus on non-surgical rejuvenation of the face, hands and neck, there are procedures that can erase these imperfections, so you can dare to go bare.

Broken blood vessels, capillaries and facial spider veins can be treated with a laser called Diolite, which has virtually no downtime. There is no special preparation needed prior to treatment, but patients should avoid sun exposure and tanning of the treatment area, and avoid taking products with aspirin and substances that inhibit coagulating abilities. There is mild discomfort during the procedure. Afterward there may be some minimal redness and swelling, but it usually subsides in just two to four hours. The number of treatments required depends on the size of the vessel, its location and how long it's been there. On average, anywhere from two to six treatments may be necessary.

For acne, Isolaz Therapy is a treatment that combines a vacuum and a painless light, which clears up existing acne and prevents further outbreaks. The vacuum loosens and takes out blackheads and excess oil. The broadband light kills the bacteria in the pores that contribute to acne. Patients that have used Isolaz report improvement within 48 hours. In addition to clearing up acne, it reduces pore size, improves skin tone and texture, and helps to reduce red and brown spots associated with laser treatments. Treatments are given every one to two weeks. Many patients experience dramatic and lasting results in just three to five treatments.

Then there is the much talked about Fraxel, which is a laser that has FDA clearance for the treatment of wrinkles around the eyes, brown spots, acne scars, surgical scars and skin resurfacing. Everyone's skin is different, but it usually requires three to five sessions and the downtime is 24-48 hours of pinkness or redness. Topical anesthesia is applied and left on for an hour prior. While the treatment is being done, cold air is blown on the treated area. Afterwards, skin looks smoother and fresher. Tone and texture is improved and wrinkles are reduced around the eyes. Acne scars are reduced in appearance or gone completely. The most common areas treated are face, neck, chest, and the back of hands.

Dr. Fusco warns, however, that if you are going to be spending a great deal of time in the sun this summer that you postpone having Fraxel until the fall. I asked her to define what she meant by "a great deal." She said, "If you plan to be on the beach everyday this is not something you are going to do at the start of summer." I asked her about those who bike, hike or swim mostly on the weekends. "As a physician, I'm not comfortable recommending patients have Fraxel if that is how they spend each weekend." But if you're someone who does wear sunscreen and a hat and you're not an outdoor, weekend warrior you can begin Fraxel now, and enjoy the benefits in time for the Hampton Classic and other events in August when the weather is hottest and you are wearing the skimpiest of sundresses.

While the cost of these treatments might be more money than you want to spend in this economy, consider what you spend on topical treatments, concealers and the psychological discomfort. Another benefit is that you can expect results from these treatments to last an average of two years. Two good reasons to steer clear of too much sun exposure and make an appointment for one of these treatments now.

A: Thank you for your email Georgiana. Yes, indeed, I have been to the Graceful Swan, 536 Montauk Highway, East Quogue and agree, it is definitely a must-stop shop for home furnishings and accessories.

Tommy Hilfiger has just opened in East Hampton. The store reflects the brand's aspirational yet affordable philosophy. "East Hampton embodies Americana with a fun yet sophisticated style," said Tommy Hilfiger. Intimate and vibrant, the 1,850 square foot interior space is where traditional meets modern. The walls are accented in leather and walnut and adorned with antique brass fixtures. Persian rugs mingle on a herringbone oak floor, while aged leather and linen seating provide a rest area. The store's façade, a white brick exterior with awnings and brass lettering, pays homage to its Hamptons surroundings. Both women's and men's products, including vintage, will be offered. For summer 2009, the store will open with "Hamptons Bohemia," a selection of items inspired by the nautical character of the Hamptons, featuring lobster prints and cricket sweaters. ## TAKE A HIKE By Ken Kindler

Winter Harbor Hill

Long Island was formed approximately 20,000 years ago by a mile-wide glacier that pushed and deformed the land, then dropped sediment as it melted and receded. Geologists believe that the glaciers not only pushed soils ahead of them to form a moraine, but also deformed the bedrock. Kettle holes are the result of chunks of ice (buried by sediment) that left a depression as they melted. Because of how Long Island was formed, it comprises a diverse and unique geology.

Last week I visited Winter Harbor Hill on the Ronkonkoma Moraine. I parked nearby at Chatfield's Hole, a kettlehole pond. To get to Chatfield's Hole in East Hampton, head north on the East Hampton-Sag Harbor Turnpike (Route 114), turn right onto Swamp Road and travel approximately one mile to Two Holes of Water Road. Turn right; continue about a quarter of a mile and park on the left shoulder alongside a pond called Chatfield's Hole. A marker there reads: "Chatfield's Hole. Named after one of the early settlers, Thomas Chatfield, who was collector of the Port 1668 and Town Clerk in the early 1700s." The two holes of water are actually located a short distance north of the road, not on parkland. During the winter, you can see Northwest Harbor from the top of Winter Harbor Hill; in summer, you'll see a wide diversity of plant and animal life from Chatfield's Hole.

Winter Harbor Hill is traversed by the Paumanok Path between CR 114 and Two Holes of Water Road. Here it shares its corridor with the Northwest Path. The town built the trailhead at CR 114 through a cooperative effort with the East Hampton Trails Preservation Society. If you were to follow the trail marked by the yellow triangles of the NW Path and the white rectangles of the Paumanok Path northeast to Chatfield's Hole, it would be two miles, round trip, with Winter Harbor Hill in the middle.

Ken Kindler

Chatfield's Hole

The Foster's Path trailhead is at the road shoulder parking by Chatfield's Hole. This trail is marked with orange markers. You can take a number of walks from this location. Last week, to visit Winter Harbor Hill, I followed Foster's Path up onto a bluff that overlooks Chatfield's Pond. When I reached the intersection with the Paumanok Path, instead of continuing north on Fosters Path, I turned right and headed southwest on the Paumanok Path. I followed the Paumanok Path, crossing Two Holes of Water Road, south of where the car was parked. If I had headed north on Foster's Path, after four miles, I would have intersected the Paumanok Path at Scoy's Pond by the Grace Estate. If I had gone left on the Paumanok Path I would have travelled along the shore of Chatfield's Hole, where just before the Paumanok Path heads north, you can turn left and follow an unmarked, but well-defined, trail around the pond, taking you to the road north of where the car was parked. Follow along on the map of East Hampton trails, obtained by sending a check made out to EHTPS ($11 for EHTPS members and $16 for non-members) to Richard Lupoletti, 66 Oyster Shores Rd., East Hampton, New York 11937.

On January 5, I visited the badly eroded trail at Winter Harbor Hill with several members of East Hampton Trails Preservation Society, and Mike Vitti, president of CLIMB, a regional mountain biking group and NY representative for IMBA, an international mountain biking group. We discussed a project to remediate the trail. LITLC has assisted in developing the volunteer base for this initiative. On February 22, a rainy Sunday, about 30 people worked together to plan a re-route of the trail. They were hikers, bikers (including the Spokes People, a local mountain biking organization), equestrians and town officials from both East Hampton and Southampton. The plan was approved by the EH Department of Land Acquisition and Management and the Department of Natural Resources. On April 15, it received approval from the Town Board. On June 12, 15 volunteers from Goldman Sachs, along with members of EHTPS and the Spokes People will do the actual work. Mike Vitti will be there to lend his expertise to the event.

If you love our trails as I do, you are aware that this cooperative effort, spearheaded by EHTPS, is the beginning of something that will help insure that our trails can continue to provide us, and future generations, the quality trails experience we have grown to expect on our unique and lovely island.

Summer Safety Tips for Pets

Imagine putting on layers of winter clothes, your heavy winter coat, socks, boots, gloves and a wool hat when it's 80 degrees outside. Visual analogies are important because no matter how many times we hear that warning on the radio, telling us not to leave our dogs in the car during summer, police still end up breaking into them, and emergency rooms are filled with dogs that were left for "just a few minutes" while their human families were shopping or banking. What some people don't realize is that even when the outside temperature is in the low 80s, it only takes a few minutes for the temperature inside an automobile to climb to more than 100 degrees, even with the windows slightly open. Not too long after that, your dog will suffer from heat stroke. If a car is parked in the sun, the temperature inside can rise 30 degrees per minute and quickly turn into a deadly situation. If you are going out for the day and there is a slight chance that your dog will not be allowed to accompany you inside a store or you might stop somewhere for lunch, please leave your dog at home. It's the kindest thing you can do. Make sure that wherever your dog is, he is cool and comfortable. Brachiocephalic dogs, with indented foreheads and short snouts like bull dogs, shih tzus and pugs, puppies, older dogs, dogs with long or thick coats and dogs that are overweight or have health issues, especially of the respiratory and cardiovascular variety, should be given extra consideration during the summer months. If you keep your dog outdoors make sure there is plenty of shade and fresh clean water. Chipped ice will help to keep it cooler longer. If you have areas on your property that collect standing water, DO NOT let your dog drink it – that includes the birdbath and the pool cover. It's a pool party for intestinal parasites, known as giardia, causing diarrhea and requiring antibiotic therapy.

The garden hose is off limits too unless you have a new "SAFE TO DRINK" garden hose. Hoses can be lined with dangerous levels of lead and fittings containing toxic chemicals. So even though we all have fond memories of drinking from the garden hose as kids, it's really not a good idea.

While on the topic of water, here's a quick word about swimming pools: if your dog has easy access in, make sure he knows how to exit. Simply teach him the way you would a young child. A life vest is always a good idea.

Another summer hazard hiding in plain sight is the pavement, especially roadways, black top driveways and brick walkways. I know that sounds like there's pretty much nothing left to walk on but in bright sunlight some of these areas can become extremely hot and harmful to your dog's paws. If you notice that your dog will not stand still and keeps shifting from leg to leg it's probably because the walkway is too hot, and you need to cross to an area with more shade.

This is something I cannot get used to seeing: dogs riding in the back of pick-up trucks. This is so dangerous that it has become illegal in many states. Your dog may not attempt to jump out of the truck, but any short stop might throw him into traffic.

Plant food, fertilizer, and insecticides including tick sprays can be fatal if your pet ingests them. It is equally important that you know what's growing in your garden, as over 700 plants can be harmful.

Dogs add a tremendous amount of joy to the summer playtime months so please give them the love and care they deserve. And don't forget the heartworm and tick preventatives.

HOMELIFE

Err, A parent By Susan Galardi

Alcohol and Children: Show and Tell

A study published in the Journal of Adolescent Health in 2004, said that "Drinking with parents appears to have a protective effect on general drinking trends."

Now before anyone begins convulsing over the thought that a medical journal is advocating an elementary school child having a Manhattan or two before bed with his parents, let me explain.

The idea is not to booze it up with your children. In fact, the study isn't a recommendation at all, but observation. The theory is that when children see parents and adults drinking alcohol as part of their home culture, it actually protects them against reckless drinking to an extent. Now before anyone begins convulsing over the thought that having beer blasts with your teenagers will keep them out of future keg parties, let me explain.

The idea is: Do as the Romans (or other Italians, Spanish or French) do. In those Mediterranean countries, drinking, usually at the family table, is simply a part of the culture. Children see their parents and other adults having wine with dinner just as they'd have some nice cheese afterwards. Alcohol isn't presented to children as a drug used to escape from problems or squash feelings of anger or sadness. It is simply a food custom. And statistics bear it out. In Italy and Spain, there is a low rate of alcohol dependence – not even 1% in Italy, 2.8% in Spain. In the U.S., the rate of alcohol dependence is almost 8%.

Of course there are those who have a predisposition to become alcoholic – it is genetic. If that's the case in an immediate family member or even in recent family history (grandparents, aunts, uncles), then one must proceed with tremendous caution. For those who are alcoholic in nature, even if they witness "normal" drinking, chances are they won't drink normally. It was explained to me like this: A social drinker has one or two, starts to feel a little tipsy, and stops. An alcoholic has one or two, starts to feel tipsy, and is off to the races. A physical, chemical reaction occurs, rendering the person unable to have any control over what happens after that. Many a "qualification" in 12-step rooms comes from those who grew up with teetotalers or social drinkers, who still "became" alcoholics. (I use quotes because many in the medical community believe one doesn't become an alcoholic, one is born an alcoholic.)

So, what do we do with our children? Well, they learn behavior by watching behavior, so obviously, drinking like a sailor and acting out isn't the way to go. In our house, my partner drinks an occasional glass of wine with dinner. I often drink non-alcoholic wine or beer. Our son has apple juice. Sometimes he has asked for a taste. He kind of liked the non alcoholic beer. Prefers apple juice to non-alcoholic wine (as do many people). He didn't like the 'real' wine, and hasn't asked since a few early experiments.

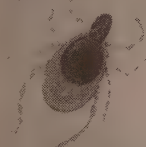

We explain to him that grown ups drink alcohol, but children shouldn't – it's too strong for their growing bodies, just like some medicines for grown ups are too strong for kids. And we talk about what happens when people drink too much – that some people feel sick or get sleepy when they drink a lot. Just like it's not safe to drive when you're tired, it's unsafe to drive when you drink. We talk about in terms of normal safety rules – you don't ride your bike at night and you don't throw balls in the house.

But mainly – like any lesson for a child – we teach by showing. Hopefully when he's a teenager, and if he is not wired for alcoholism, he'll follow that lead.

Dr. Otto will be at John Jermain Library in Sag Harbor on Saturday, teaching kids fun, gross magic tricks. See Kid Calendar, May 30.

Bay Street Theatre Set to Enchant and Bewitch

By Amelia Persans

Bay Street Theatre's first production of the summer asks the question, "How much are you willing to change for the one you love?" Bell, Book and Candle, which refers to an archaic method of excommunication, is a lighthearted spin on the phrase's darker original meaning. Starring a mischievous, young witch and her attractive, straight-laced neighbor, the play was the inspiration for the long-running TV series, "Bewitched." It was also made into a film in 1958 starring the famous Vertigo couple, Kim Novak and Jimmy Stewart. Unfortunately for the witch, but fortunately for the viewer, her neighbor is already engaged. Foul play ensues. An unexpected, romantic twist makes it thoroughly delightful.

It is precisely this delicious wickedness that attracted the Bay Street team to John Van Druten's play. Bay Street artistic director Sybil Christopher described it as a fantasy that is somehow grounded, with fanciful characters caught in difficult situations. She believes the final product will be positively "enchanting." According to Christopher, Bay Street chose to open the season with this play to give the summer a "shape" – as they do every season. Whether the theater-goer knows it or not, the intention is to take the audience on a journey of sorts. Easing into the season with this lighthearted but biting romantic comedy, Bay Street will then take audiences to a darker place with Dinner, a black comedy about revenge, before ending the season on a gentler, more uplifting note with Dames at Sea.

Tony-award-winning director, Jack Hofsiss, will direct this year's opening summer production. Hofsiss has an impressive resume with Drama Desk, Outer Critics Circle, Obie and New York Drama Critics Awards, not to mention a Tony for Elephant Man. His film/TV credits include I'm Dancing As Fast As I Can with Jill Clayburgh, Cat on a Hot Tin Roof with Jessica Lange, and The Oldest Living Graduate with Henry Fonda.

Once again, Bay Street presents talented, award-winning actors. Arija Bareikis (TV's "Southland," "Grey's Anatomy" and "Without a Trace") plays the scheming witch, Gillian

Art Commentary

Large and Small Spaces at Christy's and Delaney Cooke

It's obvious that Sag Harbor has a lot going for it. What's not so obvious is its growing number of art galleries housed in interesting, often historic venues like the ones we find on the North Fork. This time, the row houses intersecting Main and Madison Streets make perfect settings to show art. Sometimes the owner lives in the gallery itself (like The Winter Tree's Cuco Romley). Ditto for Bill Negron who years ago resided nearby in his printmaking workshop/gallery.

The newest Sag Harbor venue, Christy's Art Center, is a good example of a historic row house turned into an art space. It's a surprisingly big place with exposed brick walls and low ceilings. First time visitors might imagine they are in a castle during the Middle Ages, although we admit that's an exaggeration. The point is this: The space transports us to another intriguing time and place.

While such a feeling is attractive, we must also recognize that the ambience may diminish our capacity to concentrate on the art. Simply stated, there's too much to experience. This is not to suggest that the art itself is unworthy – most of the pieces are outstanding and insightful. The theme, "Botanicals," helps to connect the work, giving it focus, definition and a sense of fascinating contradiction.

Consider canvases like Jill Musnicki's "Red Tulips," small and simple, yet charming and powerful, or Andy Warhol's three screen prints, "KiKu," which is somewhat bigger and bolder, yet subtle and effective.

Contrasts continue with Daria Deshuk's "Sunflowers," which is minimal and abstract compared to Dan Rizzie's "Susan's Garden," a large work combining a whimsical image with surrounding, methodical text. The words are often difficult to distinguish, but there's something classical about the entire piece. Such an opposition allows us to interpret the garden's meaning which, like its creator (Susan), is both graceful and staunch.

Conversely, David Slater's "Mardi Gras" piece doesn't necessarily have oppositional elements, although its style is quite different from other pieces in the show. While the artist makes us work at defining the figures (including a big flower, thus the "Botanical" theme) we appreciate the environment evoked. Other artists like Miriam Douganis and Kryn Olson are equally expressive in establishing an evocative setting.

Across the street, Delaney Cooke Gallery is another new space (open since October 2008). It is

by Dominick Cantasano

small and inviting, in direct contrast to Christy's layout, with the conventional white walls as a background.

Dominick Cantasano's paintings and pastels are anything but subtle, their colorful geometric abstractions giving energy and life to the space. Even so, the images themselves suggest several things, including scenes from outer space. There are also hints of other artists' styles, like Michael Knigin's NASA series and Kenny Scharff's cartoon characters.

Regardless of their origins, the works are both playful and serious at once. A case in point is the image ("Hole in the Plane"), paying homage to a freak 1988 accident on Aloha Airlines.

Besides their varied contents and purposes, the paintings also convey diverse styles, like Pop Art and Surrealism. The combination seems to work well in this current exhibit.

"Botanicals" will be on view at Christy's until June 5. Call 631-725-0534. The current show at Delaney Cooke will be available until May 31. Call 631-324-3375 for hours.

PT Walkley at the Talkhouse

By Tiffany Razzano

Taking a cue from the songwriting masters of the '60s, PT Walkley, who also serves as frontman for rock outfit The Blue Jackets, offers fans a complete musical experience with his first solo album, Mr. Macy Wakes Alone.

These days, with people constantly plugged into their iPods and the music they listen to shuffling every few minutes, most don't have the attention span for anything more than short, snappy singles, which tend to dominate the current musical climate. But Walkley's Mr. Macy – a concept album revolving around the characters of Audrey Macy, a trust fund kid, her evil record executive father and the songwriter he exploits, Calvin the Coroner – goes against the grain, forcing listeners to actually focus on and really think about the music.

"The songs are pretty eclectic so I decided to thread a story line through it," he said. "This is a singles-based era. People have so many things thrown at them every day, it's harder to stay focused on something like a concept album." Still, he noted, while every song on the album fits together to tell a cohesive story, ultimately each song is capable of standing alone and being listened to on its own.

Musically, Walkley, who was born and raised in Cold Spring Harbor, gives a nod to the '60s, the decade he refers to as "the golden era of musicianship." With the songs that make up Mr. Macy often reminiscent of bands such as the Beatles and the Kinks, much like these and other bands from that period, Walkley "mixes pop music with lush string arrangements, winding melodies and storytelling." And he brought an impressive line-up of musicians into the studio to help him record – Sean Lennon, who plays guitar and piano on several tracks, guitarist Larry Campbell (Bob Dylan, Levon Helm), trumpeter Steven Bernstein (Sex Mob, Rufus Wainwright), string arranger David Campbell (Beck, Johnny Cash) and mixer Trina Shoemaker, who has worked with artists such as Sheryl Crow and Queens of the Stone Age.

Growing up on Long Island, with no formal musical training, Walkley tooled around with the guitar a bit, as many teenagers do, but didn't really take music seriously until he began playing with bands while studying at Boston University. Even then, he wasn't writing his own music, choosing, instead, to back others on guitar.

He moved to New York City in 1999, after graduating from college (today he calls the Lower East Side home) and finally began writing his own music in early 2000, releasing an album as PT Walkley and the Adventures of Track Rabbit. "I always had messed around on piano and had little ditties in my head," he said, but it took him some time to get "the guts" to write and record his own songs.

Then, while working in a guitar store, he met actor and director Ed Burns and the two struck up a friendship. Walkley scored and wrote songs for several of his movies. And eventually, they formed The Blue Jackets together, which is actually a side project for most members of the band. "It's the perfect situation," Walkley said. "There's no pressure." Still, the band has released several EPs, will likely work on a full-length album in the near future and also recently opened for Coldplay at Madison Square Garden.

Although Walkley plays often at the Stephen Talkhouse with The Blue Jackets, he will be doing his first solo gig at that Amagansett venue on June 6 at 8 p.m. For more information, go to ptwalkley.com or stephentalkhouse.com.

Holyroyd and Sam Robards (Broadway's The 39 Steps, Tony nominee in The Man Who Had All The Luck, and TV's "Gossip Girl") is her object of affection, Shepherd Henderson. Matt McGrath (Broadway's Cabaret, A Streetcar Named Desire and film Boys Don't Cry) is cast in the role of her brother, Gordana Rashovich (Master Class and TV's "The Wire" and "Mad Men") is her aunt, and Jarlath Conroy (Broadway's On the Waterfront, The Iceman Cometh, The Seagull) plays Sidney Redlitch, the meddling witch expert.

The production team has decided to stay true to the time period of the original play, and they're having a lot of fun with 1950s clothes, hairstyles and interior design. Bay Street's own Gary Hygom (Tommy, Limonade Tous Les Jours and Hair) is the set designer. Also on the team are costume designer Toni Leslie-James, lighting designer Paul Miller, sound designer Jill B.C. DuBoff, prop designer Kathy Fabian, production manager Chris Clark and casting director Cindy Tolan.

Not to raise any hopes, but the final product may include a live cat. The lead actress happens to have a sweet and docile feline, but allergy issues may make his participation too difficult. Whatever the solution, Bay Street is sure to come up with something that lets the play shine best.

Bell, Book and Candle previews Tuesday, June 2 through Friday, June 5, with opening night Saturday, June 6. The shows run through June 28. Purchase tickets online at www.baystreet.org, by calling 631-725-9500, or at the Box Office.

Restaurant Review: B. Smith

By Susan Galardi

Why do you go out to dinner?

Why does anyone, particularly now?

I go because I want to relax, be served and eat food that I don't make at home (duck, lobster, anything French). Other people go for an evening's entertainment in a happening atmosphere that may include (in the Hamptons at least) a celebrity sighting.

Some go for ambiance – design, décor or setting that can't be found anywhere else. Diehard foodies care little about anything else but what's on the plate.

You can go to B. Smith's, which just reopened for the season on Long Wharf Marina in Sag Harbor, for a few of those reasons and be happy. First, the setting is unparalleled in Sag Harbor – right on the pier. Funny, the inside is lovely with its dramatic yet simple black and white décor; and the deck is pretty basic (white plastic tables and chairs). But why bother doing anything else when you can offer a dining experience that's like being on a boat deck out on the bay?

That's where we sat. It was cool and grey out, but who cares? The water sparkled and the air felt like summer. Swallows flitted by, crows squawked, gulls perched on posts. I dined with another adult and a six-year old boy – a good reason to opt for outdoor seating.

The service on this early Saturday evening (only the second night the place was open this season) was laid back and friendly. Who knows what will happen on a Saturday in July, but at that moment, all was well.

The dinner entrées at the restaurant range from $26 for Pan Roasted Free Range Chicken, to mid-$30s. A little high even for the Hamptons, but did I mention you're right on the water? Appetizers are $12-$18 (for the mussels, which could be a light entrée).

You can go one of two ways with food at B. Smith's: keep it simple and go for the great selections from the raw bar (from oysters to crab legs) as appetizers, mussels and salad for the meal; or go all out and dive into the bold offerings of chef John Poon.

If you opt for the latter, you'd better not be a timid eater. Poon, a native of Hong Kong who has studied both classic French and American cuisines, lets it rip with his flavor-packed offerings. We went that route, but next time, I'll probably change it up and go with some simpler dishes interspersed as a palate cleanser.

We started with a rack of ribs for the boy, shrimp dumplings and crab cakes for us. (The restaurant doesn't have a kid's menu per se, but they were willing to do that order with fries; and when we left I think I saw a kid eating a quesadilla.) But the boy didn't like "B's Sweet Moppin Sauce" on the ribs, so we ate those too. I found them to be moist, meaty and fall-off-the-bone tender. The sauce, made in house, was mildly tangy with a touch of clove. We requested a plain order for the child and oddly, they were dry – maybe due to opening weekend kinks in the kitchen. The corn just shouldn't have been served. Wait for the local season.

Shrimp dumplings were delicate and tasty with shards of ginger, and the Thai dipping sauce did the trick as a contrast. I wasn't wild about the Low County Crab Cake. It had a nice, mild flavor and a good crunch – but I like more crab and less cake.

For entrees, I opted for Pan Tanned Spicy Jumbo Scampi with coconut black rice and fresh mango glaze – enormous meaty salty shrimp, perfectly cooked. Forget the glaze, they were wading in a mango/cream sauce – like a warm mango sorbet. So decadent and deliciously over the top. The rice was too soft and the flavor too heavy for my taste – I'd have preferred plain rice maybe with a little saffron to set off that sauce.

All the seafood we had was fresh with good texture. But the sauce for the Pan Fried Block Island Swordfish knocked my socks off. In fact, Poon should bottle some of these concoctions – the BBQ sauce on the ribs, the mango dream sauce, and this one, called "spicy sour sauce." It's complex. Plenty of heat tamed with richness. Our server, Cornelius, found out it had chili powder, onion, ginger, lemongrass, chicken stock – and I'm sure a lot more. The swordfish was served with a plantain hash – tasty on its own, but for me, again, the powerful flavors fought the main course.

For dessert ice cream and sorbets were serviceable. But the warm Bourbon Street Bread Pudding was a winner: Smooth creamy texture – more like a soufflé –

B. Smith's has an adequate wine list – I think the place is more about lovely summer cocktails to enjoy on the deck before the meal as you savor the sunset.

BACK IN THE DAY

Dear Dan,

I grew up in Queens. Its major event was the 1939 Flushing Meadow, Corona, New York World's Fair. There were exhibits from all over the world. A young man came there to show how mannequins could sing. It's a small, small world. Some showed us what the world would be like in the future. Some of it did actually happen.

Our family lived within three blocks of each other. All your relatives lived on these three blocks and guess what? They always knew all about you all the time. Now this was a major guilt trip.

My paternal grandpa was a farmer in the old country. He did good and purchased acres on rural Long Island. He became a carpenter and built his own house. He retired there. On weekends anyone from the three-block family could go there. That house is still in our family. I don't know if it's a small world? It's mine and this I know for sure. We would travel on the Vanderbilt Motor Parkway. The journey begins. Adventure waits.

This parkway came before the Long Island Expressway, Route 495. The night was dark except for the twinkling stars that lit up the sky. We would always find the farm.

In the morning, Aunt Lucy would be our special director. We swam the isolated beaches, dug for clams with our toes, and caught the blue claw crabs. Grandpa had a great garden and grapes for wine. He also raised prize chickens. He always named the summer chickens after us, his grandkids. Not funny! Each aunt cooked our favorite dish. We could eat all we wanted. Mangia!

We played hide and seek. When night arrived we told scary stories. We were on best behavior because it was soon time for the major event. Kerosene lamps were placed on the tables. Little bugs danced around the flickering flames. Suddenly the door opened. Trays of pastries were brought out. Soon we were covered in powdered sugar. You could have all you wanted. Sweet. When our eyes were heavy, we crawled into our beds. The smell of pine trees filled the cabin. Awesome!

NOT MASHED POTATOES YET!

Dear Dan,

I was very sorry to read that the Potato Hampton race was cancelled. But I, along with a few others, plan to run it this Sunday beginning at 9 a.m. During trying times our nation must stand together to preserve our founding fathers dreams for America such as free speech, the right to privacy and the right to run. We will run the same course on the same date as it has been for years.

I always preferred new potatoes and so have aptly named it the "New Potato Hampton." The cost will be lower (free) and there stands a much better chance that I will win the race. Your wonderful spirit lives on and with a bit of luck this will morph into a very sweet potato.

Jeffrey Tannenbaum

OH YES THEY ARE

Dear Dan,

Dan Rattiner's op-ed was full of untruths and bias. First of all, his interpretation of the word alien is not only technically incorrect, but rather juvenile and shallow. These individuals ARE here illegally, and thus are committing an illegal act, no matter how many of them there are, or who has behaved similarly in the past. To that effect, times have changed, and those who may have been admitted into the country when it was not overpopulated and rife with economic problems were living under different circumstances. Those that "got here" were never admitted under the guise that they would be allowed to stay here. Our neighborhoods are full, schools at capacity, and millions are vying for the few jobs that they previously would have considered "beneath" them. Regardless, I have no desire for my tax dollars to support the livelihoods of those who are not contributing to our economic system. They may very well be charming individuals, and are welcome to come here to work with visas or temporarily, but staying here without proper documentation is illegal, unlawful, and a huge drain on our system.

Deborah Fenker

It is, but that doesn't entitle people to declare people "illegal aliens." They are persons from afar acting illegally, yes. – DR

LIVE AND LET LIVE

Dear Dan,

I'm writing to commend you for your article, "Illegal Immigrants – Derogatory Term Describes What Many of Our Ancestors Did."

I'm sure that after comprehensive reform passes and the dust settles, we'll look back at a fully integrated Latino community and wonder what all the fuss was about. Just like so many of us forget the fuss that attended our ancestors' journey and integration into American life.

Mike Anthony
Westhampton, Via e-mail

THEY BELONG

Dear Dan,

I read your article about illegal aliens, and couldn't agree with you more.

I emailed you in 2005 about this situation and although you agreed, you didn't think your paper was the proper venue to discuss this. I am a painter and had done a series of paintings on day laborers to show the character and humanity of these much-maligned people (as are all incoming immigrants, legal or not.) You liked the paintings and thought they might work in an insert if you did an article about it.

I'm sending an attachment of one of the paintings but you can reach my website at sheilabreck.com and see many of them. I call the series "The Shadow Economy."

I hope you enjoy them and can find a place in your paper to display them.

Sheila Breck

Police Blotter

Problem with EMS

In East Hampton, a young man who got into a fight that caused injuries to the other participant that required medical attention attempted to block emergency medical services from helping the injured man. The combatant was shouting obscenities at the EMS workers, who are volunteers, and then tried to block traffic. He has been arrested for disorderly conduct, obstructing emergency medical services and blocking traffic.

Fight With Giuliani

Former New York City Mayor Rudolph Giuliani got into a scuffle with John McCluskey in Bridgehampton. McCluskey was arrested after threatening to hit Giuliani while crossing the street. McCluskey denied the allegations, saying that he criticized Giuliani to his face and when he did, it was Giuliani who threatened to fight him, so he made a threat back in response. The matter is being investigated.

Cell Phone Theft

Somebody stole an Apple iPhone from a locker at the Ross School in East Hampton. The student made a report, and is also working on an iPhone application to prevent that from happening in the future.

Prostitution Break Up

Two men were arrested in Southampton after police cracked a big prostitution case. The man was operating a brothel out of his Southampton home, bringing prostitutes in from New York City.

Drinking and Pot

A man in East Hampton was caught driving onto the shoulder of the road by a traffic police officer. The officer found the man to be drunk and high on marijuana. The officer arrested the man, who sobered up quickly.

Tough Love

An ex-boyfriend was arrested by police after he stole his ex-girlfriend's cell phone and then made threatening telephone calls to her with it. Police are still trying to figure out how she was able to answer the calls when her cell phone was stolen.

$45 Billion

Forty-five billion dollars was issued in parking tickets within the Town of East Hampton as Memorial Day Beach goes and even residents didn't realize that they needed to get parking permits. The Town is considering using the money to pay off all of the dough that was swindled by Bernie Madoff.

Skate For Life

A 40-year-old woman in East Hampton reported to police that somebody stole her skateboard.
